Governor General's Foot Guards, 150th anniversary Commemorative envelope

Issue date: June 7, 2022

The Governor General's Foot Guards have participated in every engagement undertaken by the Canadian Army since Confederation, served abroad as peacekeepers, and provided emergency assistance to communities at home. Known for their scarlet tunics and tall bearskin caps – seen in ceremonies, on sentries and at regimental band performances – the Guards' citizen soldiers have served with precision, pageantry and pride for 150 years.

Dear Collectors

To the road more travelled

After more than two years of social isolation, let's admit it. We all have a serious case of wanderlust.

Fortunately, our latest issue, Vintage Travel Posters, is just what the doctor ordered.

The five stamps in this stunning set feature eye-catching posters that tempted travellers in the early 20th century to explore Canada's rugged beauty in comfort and class. Launched in Toronto at CAPEX 22 – the world's first International One Frame Stamp Championship Exhibition – we hope they'll have you contemplating your next adventure.

We're also honouring the Governor General's Foot Guards with a special commemorative envelope. Familiar faces at ceremonial events, these citizen soldiers have stood on guard for Canada for 150 years – by conducting combat and peacekeeping missions overseas, and providing assistance during emergencies here at home.

Cheers, Friends!

Bronwyn Graves, Director, Stamp Services

Eye-catching and elegant, travel posters produced by companies such as the Canadian Pacific Railway beckoned visitors to explore Canada's wild beauty and urban attractions in the early 20th century. The five featured on these stamps recall what was a golden age of commercial art in this country.

Mont Tremblant (1939) promoted the excitement of skiing at Quebec's new resort, built by American explorer and entrepreneur Joseph Bondurant Ryan just two years after he first climbed the peak. The poster was designed by Austrian-born artist Herbert Bayer, who taught at Germany's prestigious Bauhaus school of design before working as a painter and graphic designer in the United States.

The Royal York (circa 1935) was just one of many travel posters designed by Norman Fraser, who was considered Canadian Pacific's most prolific poster artist. Viewed from behind the columns at Union Station, the stately, 28-storey Canadian Pacific hotel (now the Fairmont Royal York) was the tallest building in Toronto and the largest hotel in the British Empire when it opened its doors in June 1929.

The breezy glamour of pleasure cruising on the world's largest group of freshwater lakes was the focus of Cruise the Great Lakes (circa 1937), created after the work of British designer Tom Purvis. Companies such as Canadian Pacific offered multi-day outings as a way for vacationers to relax and visit various destinations along their route.

Travel The Canadian (1955) – by Montréal-born artist Roger Couillard – captured the luxury and spectacular scenery that awaited passengers aboard the Canadian Pacific's famous transcontinental train. Pictured winding its way through the Rocky Mountains, The Canadian offered panoramic views from its innovative, glass-domed observation cars.

Canada's Picturesque East Coast (circa 1950) was designed by Saskatchewan-born Peter Ewart, who worked as a poster artist for Canadian Pacific and was also a painter and sculptor. Aimed at drawing tourists to the east coast, it highlighted three seaside destinations: Saint Andrews (also known as St. Andrews-by-the-Sea), New Brunswick; Digby, Nova Scotia; and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Featured on the poster is the original Cape Forchu Lighthouse, which was in service for more than 120 years.
